CONGRESSIONAL BRIEFING ON SERIOUSNESS OF EATING DISORDERS

WHAT: The Eating Disorders Coalition for Research, Policy & Action (EDC) will hold a Congressional briefing for House and Senate staff to address the correlation between photo-shopped images and disordered eating and to raise awareness of the seriousness of eating disorders. The briefing is hosted by the office of Senator Tom Harkin (IA), Chair of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee. Senator Harkin is a long-standing supporter of EDC advocates and their mission to bring federal attention to eating disorders. Over several Congressional Sessions, Harkin was a lead co-sponsor of the Federal Response to Eliminate Eating Disorders Act (FREED Act). "Eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa are widespread, insidious, and too often fatal. Contrary to widespread beliefs, adolescent women are by no means the only people suffering from eating disorders; these diseases don't discriminate by gender, race, income or age," said Senator Harkin. "We all have a responsibility to ensure that we undertake the necessary research, and provide the treatment and prevention that can help us beat eating disorders."

Tremendous misperceptions about the severity of eating disorders influence the federal resources devoted to eating disorders, especially research funding. Barriers to treatment, despite Mental Health Parity and the Affordable Care Act, continue to plague sufferers and their families, and people continue to die prematurely as a result. At the time this media advisory goes to press, the news of another young woman's death from anorexia on July 17, 2014, is heavily on our hearts and minds.
